WHY WE'RE HERE

The Problem

Current recruiting workflows leave firms juggling spreadsheets, siloed tools, and guesswork.

THE FUN STRATEGY

Show how absurd it is to run a recruiting firm without real operational control.

CONSIDERATIONS

About These Concepts

These aren't final scripts—they're creative springboards to find our direction.

All details can be adjusted—what matters is choosing the idea that breaks through.

Visuals are placeholder—references are used for concept art purposes only.

We're looking for the concept that stops someone scrolling & sparks curiosity.

CONCEPT # 1 – END-TO-END CONTROL

Dracula Recruits

With Loxo, Dracula has had tremendous success in his recruiting efforts, but his purpose for recruitment is a bit unsettling.

What we might see:

- Dracula speaking to camera about how Loxo has improved his recruitment practices across the board.
- His team of familiars is recruiting victi— teammembers... more efficiently than ever, and he has full visibility into their efforts.
- Members of his team are pale, with two puncture wounds on their necks. They move around the space in a sluggish trance.

Why this is a smart bet:

- Leverages a culturally recognizable character to create immediate memorability and shareability.
- Subtly showcases Loxo's visibility, efficiency, and AI capabilities through an unexpected lens.

Key Takeaway:

- Elite recruiting infrastructure—for any agenda.

CONCEPT # 2 – IMPROVISATION AT SCALE

Trust Me, I'm Your Gut

During a round of golf, Denise learns her Head of Ops, Bill has zero process and relies solely on his "gut."

What we might see:

- Bill and Denise discuss their recruiting firm while Bill's gut, personified as Bill's clone, wracks up strokes, trying to get out of the rough.
- Denise asks Bill about recruiter workflows. Bill's Gut cuts in "Let's not overthink this".
- Denise says they need a plan to improve performance quality at their firm. A club flies past them as Bill's Gut interrupts again, telling them to just "wing it".

Why this is a smart bet:

- Directly addresses leadership over-reliance on instinct without sounding accusatory.
- Golf setting reinforces the executive audience while making "performance" visually tangible.

Key Takeaway:

- Instinct isn't a strategy. Performance requires a system.

CONCEPT # 3 – IMPROVISATION AT SCALE

Freeform Recruiting

CEO Greg runs his recruiting firm like a polyrhythmic jazz band and the results are as one would expect.

What we might see:

- Greg speaks to camera as he describes his philosophy of “freeform recruiting” while jazz music plays in the background.
- One of Greg’s recruiters is seen surrounded by a chaotic system of whiteboards. Another’s workspace is covered in post-its.
- One recruiter plays saxophone directly into a phone receiver, a voice on the line can be heard begging them to stop.

Why this is a smart bet:

- Clearly contrasts improvisation with process in a way that’s instantly understandable.
- Mockumentary tone keeps the message light while exposing the risks of inconsistency.

Key Takeaway:

- Improvisation belongs in jazz, not in your recruiting process.

CONCEPT # 4 – OPERATIONAL VISIBILITY

Recruiting Rehabilitation

A recruiting firm sends burned-out recruiters to a serene “Zen garden” retreat to recover—wheelchairs, flower sniffing and all—because their fragmented workflow is too chaotic to fix.

What we might see:

- The center’s spokesperson delivers saccharine
- Near-catatonic “patients” mosey around the grounds as the spokesperson delivers cliches and platitudes.
- Potential for a behind-the-scenes, interview-style shoot where the spokesperson’s sweet and caring mask slips to reveal the monster underneath.

Why this is a smart bet:

- Takes a subtle jab at the tools and processes that work around problems instead of solving them.
- Positions Loxo as the only option to solve recruiter workflow and efficiency issues.

Key Takeaway:

- Stop treating the symptoms. Loxo is the cure.

CONCEPT # 5 – IMPROVISATION AT SCALE

Dr. Janice

Gary, fed up with the lack of consistency in his recruiters day-to-day processes, hires a Gentle Parenting expert to help guide his team to establish better workflows.

What we might see:

- Dr. Janice, sits next to a recruiter who's desk is covered in post-its. She tells them how pretty it all looks while gently implying there might be a better way.
- Dr. Janice watches another recruiter who's manually copying LinkedIn info into an ATS. She says she's proud of how hard their working, and softly asks what scares them about automation.
- Gary speaks to camera, explaining the benefits the firm has enjoyed since hiring Dr. Janice as she appears in frame to wipe a bit of yogurt from his face.

Why this is a smart bet:

- Compares the old way of doing things to operating like a naive, inexperienced child.
- Positions Loxo as the structured, modern alternative to manual, emotional, or legacy-driven processes.

Key Takeaway:

- Better workflows means better recruiting.
